In the realm of railway enthusiasts, few names resonate with the same fervor and nostalgia as Kevin Lewis, affectionately known as Chugga Chugga Choo Choo. His captivating storytelling and infectious passion for trains have left an indelible mark on the hearts of countless individuals, young and old alike.

Born in 1934, Kevin Lewis grew up in a time when steam locomotives still dominated the railway tracks of Great Britain. His fascination with trains began at an early age, as he would spend countless hours watching them thunder past his home. It was during these formative years that his signature catchphrase, "Chugga chugga choo choo," was born.

The Railway Rambler

As Kevin Lewis's passion for trains grew, so too did his desire to share his knowledge and enthusiasm with others. In 1964, he embarked on a new chapter in his life, becoming the "Railway Rambler" for BBC Radio. For over two decades, he traveled the length and breadth of the country, visiting railway stations, interviewing railway staff, and delving into the rich history of British railways.

Kevin Lewis's broadcasts were a revelation for railway enthusiasts. His infectious enthusiasm, coupled with his encyclopedic knowledge of trains, made his shows a must-listen for anyone with a passion for the iron road. He had an uncanny ability to connect with his audience, young and old alike, and his broadcasts were instrumental in inspiring a new generation of railway enthusiasts.

The Chugga Chugga Choo Choo Show

In 1989, Kevin Lewis's popularity reached new heights with the launch of his own television show, "The Chugga Chugga Choo Choo Show." The show was an instant hit, captivating viewers with its lively blend of railway history, trainspotting adventures, and Kevin Lewis's inimitable storytelling.

For over a decade, "The Chugga Chugga Choo Choo Show" was a staple of children's television. It introduced countless young viewers to the wonders of the railway, and inspired a lifelong passion for trains in many of them. Kevin Lewis's legacy as a railway enthusiast and broadcaster was cemented, and he became known as one of the most beloved figures in the railway community.

Preserving Railway Heritage

Beyond his broadcasting career, Kevin Lewis was also a tireless advocate for the preservation of railway heritage. He was instrumental in the establishment of several railway museums, including the National Railway Museum in York and the Bressingham Steam and Gardens in Norfolk.

Kevin Lewis believed that preserving railway heritage was essential for future generations to appreciate the rich history of British railways. He was a passionate supporter of steam locomotive restoration projects, and he often visited railway workshops to lend his support and encouragement to the dedicated volunteers who were working to bring these magnificent machines back to life.

A Lasting Legacy

Kevin Lewis passed away in 2017 at the age of 82, but his legacy continues to live on. His broadcasts, books, and appearances at railway events have inspired countless individuals to pursue their own passions for trains.

Kevin Lewis will be remembered as one of the most beloved and influential figures in the railway community. His infectious enthusiasm, his unwavering passion for trains, and his dedication to preserving railway heritage have left an indelible mark on the world of railways. He will forever be known as Chugga Chugga Choo Choo, the man who brought the magic of trains to generations of railway enthusiasts.
