Julie Barker's culinary journey began in her childhood, surrounded by the flavors and traditions of her family's farm in rural Wisconsin. Inspired by her grandmother's love of cooking and the abundance of fresh ingredients available to her, Julie developed a deep appreciation for the connection between food and the land.

In 1969, Julie and her husband, Frank, purchased the Hitching Post, a small roadside tavern located in Casmalia, California. With a passion for fine dining and a desire to share her culinary vision, Julie transformed the tavern into a destination restaurant, offering a menu that celebrated the bounty of the surrounding region.
