Phelps's Approach to Teaching

Phelps believed that teaching should be an exciting and engaging experience for both students and teachers. He was passionate about literature, and he wanted to share his love of reading with his students. He believed that the best way to do this was to create a classroom environment that was stimulating and intellectually challenging. Phelps was also a master of storytelling, and he used his storytelling skills to bring his lectures to life. He would often tell stories about his own experiences as a reader, and he would also share stories about the authors he was teaching. His students loved his stories, and they found that they helped them to connect with the literature they were reading.

In addition to his storytelling skills, Phelps was also a gifted lecturer. He was able to present complex ideas in a clear and concise way, and he always made sure to keep his lectures interesting and engaging. He would often use humor to illustrate his points, and he would also frequently engage his students in discussion. Phelps was always willing to answer questions from his students, and he encouraged them to share their own thoughts and ideas.
