

The Studio Di Fonologia Years: Zuercher Musikstudien 10

The Studio di Fonologia was founded in Milan in 1954 by Luciano Berio, Bruno Maderna, and Franco Evangelisti. The studio was one of the first electronic music studios in the world, and it quickly became a center for experimentation and innovation in electronic music. Over the next two decades, the studio produced a vast body of work, including some of the most important electronic music compositions of the twentieth century.

The Studio di Fonologia was founded in a small room in the basement of the Milan Conservatory. The studio was equipped with a variety of electronic equipment, including oscillators, filters, and tape recorders. The studio's technical capabilities were limited by the technology of the time, but the composers who worked at the studio were able to use their ingenuity to create a wide range of sounds and textures.
